Angela is a mother and fierce advocate of her community and family. She also is a cancer survivor who leads the house through studies of coping for the young treatment. Due to the expensive cost of treatment and doctor visits, Angela receives Community Supported Agriculture (CSA) boxes of fresh produce from No More Empty Pots to supplement her trips to the grocery store. Angela says the food is helpful for her family during weeks when hospital bills make her mind budget especially tight. During breakfast times, Angela has peace of mind knowing her two sons have a consistent source of nutritious food at their share every week.

Through programs like Community Support, families like Angela's are learning about the availability and importance of receiving fruits and vegetables from local producers in Greater Omaha. Angela says they're having fun together as a family trying out a variety of new foods and recipes.

Patricia Jo Berry with South Omaha Garden Club "What inspired The Garden Walk with a goal of more steps of community gardens in South Omaha? Patricia said, "We are hoping that the information and love that our gardeners will allow the community to enjoy a second and positive look at what they can do in gardening the world."

No More Empty Pots was happy to participate in the South Garden of the hour! The video player was a highlight at the South Garden, and even more fun as we saw our small video player to introduce with the music that for was standing with her and engaging his fingers to the beat!

Thank you Patricia Jo Berry and Partnering Gardens!
